In 1823 the last Thursday of February was observed as a day of fasting and prayer for colleges in response to a suggestion in a circular issued with the knowledge and approval of the American Education Society. The most blessed results followed. In 1831 there were revivals in nineteen colleges, and many churches experienced seasons of grace, with the result that many of the young men then entering college were earnest Christians. In 1799 at Yale College it is said that not more than four or five professors of religion were to be found, while in 1832 fifty out of the ninety admitted to the freshman class were pious men. In Dartmouth College one-third of the graduates between 1810 and 1830 became ministers of the gospel. If we take the period between 1820 and 1835 we shall find revivals of greater or lesser extent reported in thirty-six different colleges, resulting in the conversion of some fifteen hundred students. These revivals occurred in almost all cases in the winter term and in the period succeeding the concert of prayer. The general condition of our colleges with respect to religion is evidently much better to-day than in the latter part of the eighteenth century; but there are large numbers of college students who appear to have no interest in the subject, and not a few who are nominal professors of religion are not leading lives consistent with their profession. At the same time candidates...
