Excerpt: .they mistake dung beetles for birds, and toads for partridges, and so on. But the ignorance of the scribe is best shewn by his stating that Norfolk men when once they quit their native land never thenceforward return thither if they can help it. If ever there was an outrageous lie this was one. Why, we have even now the proverb, Stand on Barford bridge and see all East people that be alive, and the homing instinct of Norfolk men is a matter of notoriety. Ask the Great Eastern Railway people how their Christmas trains fill, and don t believe any long-forgotten Lincolnshire liar. Another strange tale was that of a Norfolk fasting woman, who neither ate nor drank for twenty-five years, for which my reader can consult Claudius E., vol. viii., p. 14, in the Cottonian MSS., if he thinks it worth his...
