Excerpt: .smiled, To bright-eyed blossom by his song beguiled. Then Orpheus, with fresh heart, awoke this litany wild. Not out of impious lust, O! Nameless Name, Nor friend for friend, as Herakles hither came, Have I adventured to thine Empire dread. No might of mine--ay, well this downcast head And feeble limbs provoke thy sharpest scorn. Not his poor prowess hath thy servant borne Thus strangely past thy guardian forms of fear, Charon and Cereberus, and set unscathed here. A Power Eternal bears me from above--Now, in my need, forsake me not, O Love! On whom so crying bitterly a great change, With tremor fierce and sighing thick and strange, Smote suddenly--his labouring limbs assume Stature divine, his front immortal bloom; Erect he starts, a sudden halo bright Burns from his brow, beneath whose living light His eyes, bright stars in bluest heaven, shed Ethereal...
