The construction of curing rooms I deem of the utmost importance, in controlling the flavor and texture of cheese, even if well made; because new combinations yet to be formed with the new constituent salt, ) require the same uniformity of temperature as other previous combinations. I deem it impossible to keep and cure cheese in the same room to meet a summer, or a fall or winter market; I find my best cheese owe their superior excellence in no small degree to curing in a low, even temperature, which is never allowed to exceed 70 deg. To keep a perfect control of the temperature of a cheese room, windows are fixed to give free circulation of air when its humidity and temperature are proper to come in contact with the cheese. In good weather generally from sunrise till eight o'clock, A. M., and from sun an hour high till after sunset. To cool the room at pleasure and condense the moisture that may accumulate in the room, a large quantity of ice is stored adjoining the cheese room, so that by opening a door between cheese room and ice room, the temperature of cheese room is controlled at pleasure. The advantages of this are, the excess of heat does not vapor ize and expand the fluid constituents of cheese to cause them to swell and become porous and generate bad flavor, as an inevitable consequence of confined air, in the cells...
