The action is situated in 1849, where the Protagonist Robert Buford, a member of the upper class, is trying to chase away his inner demons by frequenting an opium den in London's Limehouse District. One day, after drinking Absinthe and smoking opium, the magical GREEN FAIRY appears, and he has a hallucinatory dream that turns nightmarish. In that Absinthe- and Opium-induced fantasy, Buford is a con-artist in Southampton, selling Gold Certificates which are claims to a half-acre of land in the area where gold is found, after the news of the California Gold Rush had spread to England. However, in a sting operation by the Police, he is apprehended but can escape. For his own safety, he decides to leave England for good. White, who is set up by a young prostitute, Marie, whom he takes to his room for the night, is confronted by Buford the next morning and knocked out. Buford, before escaping on the boat that leaves for Panama, rapes Marie and cuts her face. In Colon, Panama, Buford is lying in a seedy hotel room, smoking opium. He was taken to the hotel by Marie whom he does not recognize. Marie takes care of him, and he tells her his story of coming to Panama as the priest Jonathan White. After a failed attempt to assume the post of his predecessor who disappeared under questionable circumstances, his journey takes him to the Panama Railroad Company where he is offered a job. The RR Company faces heavy losses amongst its workforce because the...
