For three of the installations we visited, we obtained and reviewed personnel records for a random sample of enlisted 12 servicemembers whose certificates of release indicated that they were separated from these installations because of a personality disorder. For the fourth installation, we obtained and reviewed personnel records for all of the enlisted servicemembers whose certificates of release indicated that they were separated from that installation because of a personality disorder. We reviewed all of these enlisted servicemembers records because the total number of servicemembers separated from this installation was too small to draw a random, generalizable sample. Our findings based on our compliance review can be generalized to each of the four installations but cannot be generalized to the military services. In addition to the four military installations from the Army, Air Force, and Marine Corps, we visited Naval Base San Diego. We obtained and reviewed personnel records for enlisted Navy servicemembers whose certificates of release indicated that they were separated because of a personality disorder. During the course of our review, Navy officials at this base told us that enlisted Navy servicemembers selected for our review were transferred to the transient personnel unit at Naval Base San Diego from a 13 Navy ship at various points in the separation process. According to a Navy official, most enlisted Navy servicemembers were diagnosed, formally counseled, and notified of their impending separation while on board a Navy ship and were transferred to the transient personnel unit at Naval Base San Diego to receive their certificates of release. Other enlisted Navy servicemembers were diagnosed, formally counseled, and notified of their impending separation while at Naval Base San...
