Lives there a man who, of thy toil, Enjoys the corn, the wine, the oil, Whose serpent tongue would streak with blame The virgin whiteness of thy name; I May heaven s command the tiger fat To some bleak, blasted island bear, Whose leafless spray no shade provide For houseless heads and unfed sides. There mav he press the dreary mould, Within all comfortless and cold; In horror fix his haggard ey- On the pale Moon, and winter sky; And, hated by the Good and Just, In moody madness sink to dust. The Flatterers labours I contemn, I leave the venal song to them; But honestly command I will And love the praise of. virtue still. I ll say thy name, where er it goes,...
