Excerpt: .When five years old it stood eight feet and five inches high before it was pruned. It has borne since it was three years old, the last crop being one hundred and twenty quinces, the two largest filling a quart can. The longest shoot grown with this crop was six feet and four inches, in the midst of several others only a little shorter. I have thus far treated of pruning as it should be done with the knife or shears, before the limbs are large enough to need a saw. But when trees have been neglected till large limbs are to be cut off, it is important that they should be so cut as to give a good prospect of healing over; else they may be the occasion of decay going into the very heart of the tree. If the cut is made several inches from the body, there is no possibility of healing over, and decay is inevitable. On the other hand, if the limb is cut so as not to leave a projecting stump, it may grow over entirely in a few years, especially if well waxed or painted. As a rule, if the limb cut off is an inch or more in diameter, it is well to cover the wound. Gum shellac dissolved in alcohol to the thickness of paint is as good as any thing to apply. It is very adhesive, soon hardens, keeps out the air and water,...
